COURSE DESCRIPTION:
It has been said by many that anyone with good ideas can be successful in the business world today. However, only 20 percent of the businesses that are created survive their first 5 years. This course helps explain that good ideas and good products are not enough to survive in the marketplace today. Honoring the fundamental principles of marketing, including pricing, product development, promoting and distributing of business products are absolutely essential to ensure the long-term viability of an organization. This course explores and applies marketing concepts and how they fit within the context of agricultural products and their distribution. Part one explores the marketing landscape in which all marketing decisions are made, including the development of relationships with customers, the creation of a target market, how to segment your markets into measurable and successful subcomponents, and an exploration of why consumers behave the way they do. Discussions surrounding service, quality, customers, and relationship building are explored with specific reference to the creation, pricing, promotion, and distribution of agricultural commodities. The second part of the course explores the importance of the pricing function and promotional activities in the marketing mix. Concepts like demand elasticity, sales promotion and public relations are discussed. The third part of the course explores distribution strategies, i.e., how to get a product out to the customer in the most efficient and least costly way. Supply chain theory and the science of retailing, wholesaling, and direct marketing are discussed. Included here are discussions regarding the growing industry we call "e-commerce" and ways to use the worldwide web for expanded marketing opportunities for all agri-related organizations. While this course is conceptually based, students spend a great deal of energy analyzing appropriate marketing opportunities, courses of action, and creating original marketing strategies.

LEARNING GOALS:
1. To familiarize you with a select set of marketing concepts.
2. To develop your ability to apply these concepts in real world marketing situations.
3. To validate the relevance and utility of these concepts in your daily decision-making.
4. To inspire you to pursue additional economic and marketing courses.

ACADEMIC INTEGRITY
The university's policy on Academic Integrity is available at http://academicintegrity.rutgers.edu/academic-integrity-policy. The principles of academic integrity require that a student:
- properly acknowledge and cite all use of the ideas, results, or words of others.
- properly acknowledge all contributors to a given piece of work.
- make sure that all work submitted as his or her own in a course or other academic activity is produced without the aid of impermissible materials or impermissible collaboration.
- obtain all data or results by ethical means and report them accurately without suppressing any results inconsistent with his or her interpretation or conclusions.
- treat all other students in an ethical manner, respecting their integrity and right to pursue their educational goals without interference. This requires that a student neither facilitate academic dishonesty by others nor obstruct their academic progress.
- uphold the canons of the ethical or professional code of the profession for which he or she is preparing.

Adherence to these principles is necessary in order to ensure that
- everyone is given proper credit for his or her ideas, words, results, and other scholarly accomplishments.
- all student work is fairly evaluated and no student has an inappropriate advantage over others.
- the academic and ethical development of all students is fostered.
- the reputation of the University for integrity in its teaching, research, and scholarship is maintained and enhanced.

Failure to uphold these principles of academic integrity threatens both the reputation of the University and the value of the degrees awarded to its students. Every member of the University community therefore bears a responsibility for ensuring that the highest standards of academic integrity are upheld.
